

Ash and Iron

Aisen

Aisen moved through the ruined corridor. Every step echoed like a warning. The stone smelled of iron and old vows.

He found Lyra waiting at a broken brazier, her hands steady as if she had never trembled.

The thread passes on.

Caspian Vane

Caspian watched from the stairwell — a silhouette without a past that did not need one.

He slipped away before any clean answer could form.

The thread passes on.

Ser Corvin Ashford

Ser Corvin steadied his spear and kept his oath in the hollow of his chest.

